President-Elect Donald Trump has been hard at work making appointments to his cabinet. With his inauguration just around the corner many are wondering what's going to happen with policies and laws he's promised to get rid of, specifically the Affordable Care Act. It's been controversial for many Americans since it went into effect. Along the campaign trail President-Elect Donald Trump promised to get rid of it once he becomes president. I sat down with Rep. Robert Spendlove and Jason

Stevenson from the Utah Health Policy Project to talk about what it would take to dismantle the Affordable Care Act.
